

Virginia Degree Completion Network: State Report and Proposal

Developed by George Mason University and Old Dominion University
September 2015

Language contained in Chapter 665 charged
Mason with developing a plan for a comprehensive online course offering in Virginia and to:

- (1) Research similar programs in other states;
- (2) Determine the need for adult completion programs;
- (3) Identify academic programs of interest to non-traditional learners;
- (4) Consider an appropriate scheduling model; and
- (5) Suggest an appropriate pricing model

Who else is doing this?

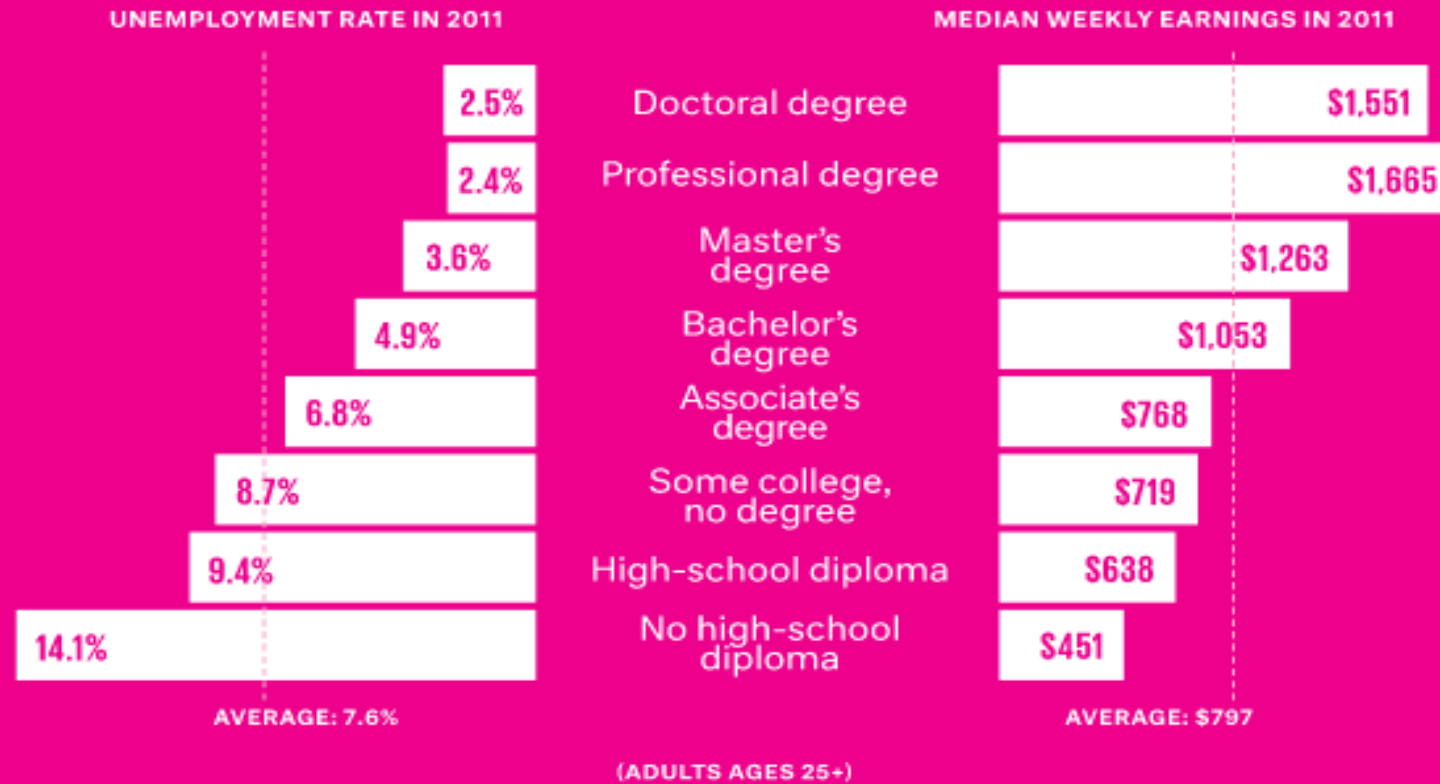

- Florida College System – Finish Up, Florida!
- Georgia – Go Back, Move Ahead – Complete College Initiative
- Louisiana – One Degree/Nine Universities
- Rhode Island – College Unbound
- Tennessee Reconnect
- GradTX – 13 Participating Universities
- West Virginia – Degree Now!

Why now?

- Over 1 million Virginians with some college education but no degree
- Online landscape rapidly changing
- External pressures – for profits
- Positive impact on quality of life for citizens
- Positive impact on the economy of the Commonwealth

Return on Investment

4. The economic value of college, meanwhile, is indisputable.

Why now?

- Mason and ODU long history in serving diverse populations, including non-traditional students (transfers, adult, military-affiliated)
- ODU's long history and expertise in on-line delivery
- Both institutions offer quality online programs in high-demand areas such as business, computer science, engineering technology, and nursing

Response to the Charge

- Create the Virginia Degree Completion Network (VDCN) to:
 - enhance access and provide adult students a conduit to degree programs across the Commonwealth using a website portal
 - provide advising services and financial aid support
 - offer seamless articulation
 - provide 24/7 access response
 - design comprehensive communication strategy targeting those in need of degree completion
